

Radha and Ishwar are two young lovers who come from different social backgrounds. Radha lives life on the edge, which angers her conservative father. Ishwar has no boundaries, invites trouble wherever he goes, and lives dangerously. Radha tries to steer him towards more direction-oriented goals, but he rejects her advice outright. Meanwhile, there is also a group of four guys who run around with Ishwar like hooligans. Though they too are in love with Radha—and she can't help but reciprocate their feelings—they find themselves jealous of each other because only one of them will end up with her. This leads to jealousy and rivalry among the four friends... This touching story highlights the importance of family values and the power of love, but it also provides an eye-opening look at youth culture in India.
